The names in this resource have been collated from The Australian War Memorial, local war memorials and Rolls of Honour. In 1914 the population of Willoughby was 21,450. The borders for the Local Government Area have moved and changed over the past 100 years. Some people included in this resource lived slightly outside our present boundaries.

There are approximately 1,055 service men and women recorded here. The vast majority of these are men who served in the Australian Imperial Force. Some nurses, for whom records have been found, have also been included. We would like to acknowledge that more than 3,000 Australian civilian nurses volunteered for active service during the First World War. Many more volunteered for the Red Cross and at privately sponsored facilities. Women also volunteered as ambulance drivers and chauffeurs. Information about these individuals is very difficult to find, and although we do not know their names, we honour their courage and service.
